New partnership to help boost service levels and profits for heavy vehicle operators

Minorplanet Asia-Pacific, a leading supplier of vehicle management information systems world wide and global electronic security company ADT Security, have joined forces to work towards becoming a certified Intelligent Access Program (IAP)¹ Service Provider.

With their combined global expertise in GPS hardware and independent security services, Minorplanet and ADT have together made a significant investment towards producing a single in-vehicle unit (IVU) that fulfills all the regulatory requirements and business management needs of heavy vehicle operators.

Heavy vehicle operators using the device will be able to leverage the IAP to gain improved access to the Australian road network. By enabling demonstrated compliance to access conditions set down by road authorities, additional business benefits may also be gained such as higher mass limits and access to wider route areas on a state-by-state basis. In short, more freight, moving faster.

Minorplanet has applied for and is actively working towards certification from the Transport Certification Australia (TCA).

“We are working towards providing customers with a system offering two major advantages - our single IVU will meet both regulatory and business management requirements plus, due to the industry leadership of our solution partner, we can ensure all data remains secure. Our union with ADT enables us to offer a best-in-class one-stop-shop for the trucking industry,” explained Martin Ryan, CEO, Minorplanet Asia-Pacific.

“As leading players in our respective fields, we’re confident that if we become an IAP Service Provider it will allow us to provide an invaluable tool for heavy vehicle operators looking for new and improved ways to stay ahead of the competition. For road authorities, the ability to extensively manage these roads and the vehicles using them has the potential to deliver safer roads for everyone,” said Stevan Ristic, National Product Manager, ADT Security.
